TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT

Teaching at QMU may be different to what you are used to at your home institution. Depending on the modules you take, you will participate in the following:

Lectures

Traditional teaching, where a lecturer speaks on a particular subject to many students.

Seminars

This is where you meet your tutor with a smaller group of students. Here you will be expected to demonstrate an understanding of the topic and contribute to discussions.

Lab/Studio Time

Some modules may require practical lab work or studio time to understand the content of the course.

Independent Study

You are expected to do a fair amount of independent study either on your own or in small groups. To be able to contribute in class and to write assignments, you are expected to read about your subject. Reading lists for each module are provided as guidance.

Assessment for modules varies, and can take the form of the following:

- Written coursework (reports or essays)
- Presentations
- Exams

Modules and Credit Transfer

You can select modules across a range of programmes from our School of Arts, Social Sciences and Management, and our School of Health Sciences. Modules are available subject to them running, availability of places, level of entry offered, and timetabling.

Modules at QMU have a credit value which allows you to transfer credit back to your home institution. Most modules are valued at 20 SCOTCAT, and a full time course load is 60 SCOTCAT per semester. You should check with your home institution how credits/grades will be recognised on your degree transcript.
